Celebrating America 250 with Essential Policy Solutions

Across the country, the celebration of July 4, 2026—the 250th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence—is underway. This once-in-a-generation milestone is more than a celebration of our past; it's a movement to shape America's future.

For ALEC, the semi-quincentennial is a powerful opportunity to renew our commitment to the principles that built and sustained our republic—limited government, free markets, and federalism.

In 2025, ALEC members approved the Resolution Commemorating the 250th Anniversary of the Founding of the United States of America. This model resolution offers state lawmakers a simple way to honor America's 250th birthday and encourage their state's educational institutions to participate in the celebrations, enhance civics education, and promote our founding principles.

ALEC is also proud to be a member of the America 250 Civics Education Coalition, a nationwide effort led by the U.S. Department of Education, America First Policy Institute (AFPI), Turning Point USA, and more than 40 other national and state-based organizations that is dedicated to renewing patriotism, strengthening civic knowledge, and advancing a shared understanding of America's founding principles in schools across the nation.

To honor America's founding, our hope is that state legislators utilize Essential Policy Solutions for 2026 as their go-to guide to empower states and shape America's future through principled policy ideas. Throughout this publication, you will find an ALEC Model Policy Checklist for each of our policy priorities, as well as ALEC Policy Champions (state legislators who have successfully implemented these policies), state rankings, expert commentary, and more.

Since 1973, the American Legislative Exchange Council has worked with elected officials and private sector leaders to develop trusted policy solutions for all Americans. Together, we will work together to create the greatest opportunities for all Americans to flourish by advancing and promoting the principles of limited government, free markets, and federalism.

We look forward to hearing from you as we continue to build our free market collection of policy ideas from the 50 "laboratories of democracy."

As you review these key policy ideas, please do not hesitate to reach out to our team if we can ever be of assistance.

BEST OF 2025:

OKLAHOMA SETS THE STANDARD

In 2025, Oklahoma achieved a remarkable series of policy successes, setting the standard for other states to emulate in 2026. The Sooner State achieved major tax cuts, strengthened health care price transparency, and ensured greater judicial accountability by limiting deference to unelected agencies. At the same time, Oklahoma enacted broad tort reforms to protect consumers, curb frivolous litigation, and enhance its business environment. All of these accomplishments were in line with Essential Policy Solutions.

TAX REFORM

Oklahoma's HB 2764, signed into law in May of 2025, reduces the state's top income tax rate to 4.5% starting next year and allows its trigger to continue the reductions all the way to zero.

HOSPITAL PRICE TRANSPARENCY

In 2025, ALEC recognized Oklahoma Sen. Casey Murdock and Rep. Mark Lepak as Policy Champions for their leadership in passing SB 889, one of the strongest health care price transparency laws in the country.

JUDICIAL DEFERENCE AND REINS-STYLE LEGISLATION

In 2025, ALEC recognized Oklahoma Sen. Micheal Bergstrom and Rep. Gerrid Kendrix as Policy Champions for successfully carrying HB 2728 and HB 2729 through their respective chambers. These bills reduce agency overreach, as HB 2728 brings REINS-style legislation to Oklahoma, and HB 2729 ends judicial deference practices in its courts (consistent with the ALEC Judicial Deference Reform Act).

Together, these bills return rule-making authority to the legislature and reduce agency overreach in Oklahoma.

TORT REFORM

In 2025, the state enacted a broad tort reform package to deter frivolous litigation, promote transparency, and strengthen the state's business environment while protecting Oklahoma consumers and families.

Key measures include SB 453, which re-establishes the noneconomic damages cap previously struck down in 2019 and aligns Oklahoma's evidentiary rules with the recently amended Federal Rule of Evidence 702. Complementing this, HB 2619 requires disclosure of third-party litigation funding agreements, prohibiting foreign entities from secretly financing lawsuits in Oklahoma.

How to Establish American Energy Dominance

Scan for ALEC
Resources

Upon returning to the White House, President Trump outlined a vision for a new “Golden Age of America,” unabashedly powered by American innovation and American energy dominance. If we hope to restore manufacturing, win the global AI race, jump-start the auto industry, and increase our housing supply, we need to increase our energy supply – and fast.

States must support pro-growth policies that leverage our abundant natural resources to power today’s businesses and the economy of the future. Prioritizing market-driven energy solutions will not only lower electricity prices but also strengthen long-term energy security. A regulatory approach that encourages innovation and competition will lead to more efficient, affordable, and sustainable outcomes.

States can set clear, realistic standards for what qualifies as clean energy, ensuring taxpayer dollars fund resources that balance both environmental and economic priorities.

Regulatory Reform

Holding executive branch departments and agencies accountable has proven to be an important issue to legislators and their constituents throughout the states, particularly throughout the pandemic. By implementing accountability measures and review processes to scrutinize new and existing rules and regulations, states can use proposed regulations as opportunities to review older regulations as well. Setting regulatory caps and deregulation requirements can aid states in streamlining government.

Procedural Efficiency

To further its mission of ensuring government efficiency, ALEC launched the Process and Procedures Task Force, a new initiative promoting clear rules of engagement between government and its citizens. To safeguard liberty, there must be rules of engagement within the government, between different governments, and between the government and the people. The Process and Procedures Task Force will expand on ALEC's efforts to safeguard these rules and ensure they are made fairly and executed for the betterment of the American people.

State Budget Reform

As states enter into their next budgeting cycles and revenue forecasts move in a less optimistic direction in many states, the ALEC State Budget Reform Toolkit is a great resource for implementing priority-based budgeting. The toolkit outlines 23 proven policy solutions for states to improve their budget process, while avoiding wasteful spending and economically damaging tax increases.

The toolkit offers proven policy solutions that can alter the budgeting process in a way that reshapes the budgeting culture.

One hallmark of the toolkit that achieves just that is the Tax and Expenditure Limitation Act. Tax and Expenditure Limitations (TELs) limit the growth of revenue collections and spending. The most effective TELs, like Colorado's Taxpayers Bill of Rights (TABOR), require voter approval to raise taxes or issue debt and apply to local governments as well, making it the perfect pairing to Truth-in-Taxation. Policy reforms like TABOR give hardworking taxpayers more protection and ensure that state budget growth is stabilized at a reasonable level.

Cutting the Strings of Federal Funding

States' dependency on federal funds has accelerated in recent years. Federal funding to the states comes in many forms such as education spending, Medicaid, infrastructure spending, and housing grants. For the states, these monies often appear harmless – after all, they are obtained without the need for increased levels of taxation. However, by accepting these funds, states may cede sovereignty over aspects of their own governments. Federal funds come with strings attached, such as Maintenance of Effort requirements, which mandate that states continue to provide funding towards those programs that receive federal funds. In other words, there's no such thing as a free lunch. Through reforms in the model of Financial Ready Utah or the ALEC model policy Federal Funds Oversight Act, state leaders can determine the extent of their reliance on federal funds and plan for the eventuality of their reduction.

Reforming State Tax Codes

A tax system that allows citizens to keep more of what they earn spurs increased work, saving and investment. This is evident across 18 editions of our annual report Rich States, Poor States: ALEC-Laffer State Economic Competitiveness Index, which reveals the economic benefits associated with states that keep tax burdens and spending at prudent levels. All taxes matter for economic growth, but taxes on capital, including business and individual income taxes, have the largest negative impact on economic outlook and growth.

In recent years, we've seen significant income tax relief in the states. Notably, more than half of states have engaged in efforts to reduce their income tax burdens. With each tax cut comes increased pressure on surrounding states to increase economic competitiveness by simplifying their tax codes.

Avoiding Discriminatory Taxes

Imposing discriminatory taxes can negatively affect state economies and lead to unintended consequences. The ALEC Principles of Taxation are clear: “The government should not use the tax system to pick winners and losers in society, or unfairly shift the tax burden onto one class of citizens. The tax system should not... engage in discriminatory or multiple taxation, nor should it be used to bestow special favors on any particular group of taxpayers.”

Model Policy Checklist ✓

- ☐ ALEC Principles of Taxation

Property Tax Reform

Property tax burdens are a pressing problem in most states nationwide. At the end of the day, the problem is mostly a local one that has to do with local spending. This often leaves state lawmakers with a lack of solutions and a wealth of constituent complaints. However, the state can play a role in solving the property tax issue through Truth-in-Taxation.

Truth-in-Taxation aims to reduce the growth of property taxes through transparency and accountability. Perhaps the most significant component of Truth-in-Taxation is the focus on revenue collection. Truth-in-Taxation contains a mechanism that ensures rates fall when assessments rise. It prevents local governments from taking advantage of assessment windfalls because local governments receive the same amount of revenue as the previous year. If local elected officials want to collect more property tax revenue than the previous year, they have to notify the voters and take a publicly recorded vote themselves. This solves the “honesty gap” problem, and local governments can no longer tell taxpayers that they are “lowering property tax rates,” while the taxpayer is left wondering why their property tax bill is higher than it was the year before.

The ALEC model policy, Truth-in-Taxation Act, is based on Utah’s most taxpayer-friendly property tax law. The measure was enacted in Utah in 1985 to provide a solution to taxpayer unrest from ever increasing assessments and property taxes. In recent years, Kansas, Iowa, and Nebraska have wisely adopted versions of Truth-in-Taxation.

While Truth-in-Taxation does not technically limit property taxes, it makes local elected officials think twice about increasing property taxes because they know all citizens will be notified of the increase and its potential impact on their property. They also know that they will have to hold a broadly advertised public hearing and recorded vote, where citizens can communicate their concerns about a proposed tax and spending increase.

How to Solve Pension Problems

Getting Politics Out of Pensions

With unfunded pension liabilities continuing to be a problem for state retirement systems, it is imperative that states take measures to protect these pension investments from politically motivated investment strategies, like environment, social, and governance (ESG) investing. In recent years, the threat of ESG has grown and subsequently waned, as pushback to the strategy has forced retirement systems to focus solely on investments that financially benefit pension plans and their participants. States can continue to prioritize workers and financial returns with the ALEC model policy State Government Employee Retirement Protection Act.

Addressing Unfunded Pension Liabilities

As noted in the latest edition of the ALEC report Unaccountable and Unaffordable, unfunded state pension liabilities are growing rapidly, now totaling $4.78 trillion or $14,378 for every man, woman and child in the United States. Clearly pension plans are in serious need of reform. Several states have taken steps to switch new state workers from the broken defined-benefit plans to portable defined-contribution plans, but many are still in need of reforms. Until they do, plans will continue to under-perform as unfunded liabilities grow and these states will struggle to keep the promise made to plan beneficiaries without soaking the taxpayer in the process.

America's strength domestically directly impacts our ability to meet global challenges and to be helpful to our friends around the world, so putting our nation's fiscal house in order is crucial to our success here and abroad. It is imperative to address the federal government's unsustainable spending habit and to begin chipping away at the national debt, which has surpassed $38 trillion. Nuclear verdicts (jury verdicts of $10+ million) have become a widespread phenomenon in the past decade, producing awards in the tens of millions to several billions to individual plaintiffs. The unavoidable impact left on the price of consumer goods and services by these damage awards raises serious concerns of sustainability. With several factors playing into exorbitantly high verdicts, there is no “silver-bullet” solution to this problem. It instead requires state specific, tailored legislative efforts.

Third-Party Litigation Financing is a multimillion-dollar effort to fund widespread litigation as an investment strategy. It is a relatively new, yet growing phenomenon facing states across the nation. Such litigation funding is often anonymous, with courts not requiring the funding behind plaintiffs be known. States are beginning to address the matter with more urgency, finding ways to prevent this abuse of the justice system.

How to Empower Parents Through Education Freedom

Scan for ALEC

State lawmakers are increasingly recognizing that there is no such thing as one school that will best fit every student. While some students will be put in the best position for future success by attending their local public school, plenty of other students will realize a higher potential and become more productive citizens by attending a private school, home school, charter school, virtual school, or micro school. States should not discriminate against any valid form of learning. Instead, they can ensure a better future for America's students by ensuring that state education dollars are flexible and follow each student to the best learning environment for them.

Since the Hope Scholarship became law in West Virginia, 16 additional states (as of 2025) have joined in creating education freedom programs that are available to all, or nearly all, students in their state. The result? Twenty-two million kids, about 40% of K-12 students nationwide, now have access to an education freedom program.

As we outline in the ALEC Index of State Education Freedom, states can also expand education freedom through policies on charter schools, open enrollment, homeschooling, and virtual schools. Likeminded lawmakers and organizations should also join the Education Freedom Alliance.

The NAEP data released in September 2025 reported that 31% of 12th graders reported missing 3 or more days of school in the month prior to taking the assessment. In 2019, this number was 25%. Chronic absenteeism is a rising challenge that states are starting to address. ALEC's Chronic Absenteeism Model Policy utilizes best practices for addressing this issue, like creating an early-warning system for students at risk of being chronically absent, implementing better attendance monitoring policies, and creating high-quality plans to address attendance issues among individual students.

Cell phones at school are a major negative factor affecting student learning. In 2024, one survey of high school teachers found that 72% of them said cell phones were “a major problem in the classroom.” In 2025, 22 states responded by passing new laws addressing this issue. Notably, this includes a mix of both red and blue states. ALEC’s Limiting Student Use of Cell Phones in K-12 Schools Act requires local school districts to adopt policies that limit student cell phone use. While the model lays out a minimum threshold for limiting student cell phone use, school districts are free to enact stricter policies if they choose to do so. In addition, teachers are empowered to permit cell phone usage for instructional purposes at any time.

One of the most important decisions that a student must make is whether they want to attend an institution of higher education, and which one. A key issue in every state is how best to address workforce shortages across industries. How to Address Controversial Curriculum

Parents should have greater input with local school boards, including curriculum decisions. Local boards should also focus on providing great education for students in the trades.

Controversial curriculum in K-12 schools continues to be a major issue for lawmakers around the country. ALEC advocates for a two-pronged approach. The first is represented by our Academic Transparency Act and Honesty in Teaching Act, which both create mechanisms for parents to object to controversial material and file complaints with the school board when it is being taught. The Academic Transparency Act also requires all teaching and learning materials to be posted online, while the Honesty in Teaching Act creates professional development opportunities for teachers found to be teaching controversial curriculum in violation of the Act.

When families discover and object to this controversial curriculum, but the school district refuses to remove it, ALEC believes they should have an alternative. Our Hope Scholarship Act model policy, which is discussed in the above section, creates a universal education savings account program that parents can access to send their children to another school that better aligns with their values.

How to Make Elections Safe, Secure, and as the Founding Fathers Intended

Scan for ALEC
Resources

America's Founding Fathers crafted a system of elections that is fair and ensures that smaller states still wield influence at the national level. However, these protections are being undermined systematically, as some want to experiment with the precious American right of suffrage. Emphasizing the importance of upholding our federal republic of the structure the constitutional framers devised – including but not limited to the Electoral College – will be of the utmost importance in 2026.

Additionally, special interests are pushing a novel and complicated election process called ranked-choice voting (RCV). Often, they try to enact this in local jurisdictions, creating conflict between local and state election processes. RCV is promoted as a solution to perceived difficulties with voting in the US; however, it is more likely to exacerbate rather than mitigate elections problems in part because it is complicated. RCV's complexity causes more voter error, leading to electoral results that less accurately reflect voter sentiment.

Resources

ALEC’s Education and Workforce Development Task Force, in collaboration with the ALEC Center to Protect Free Speech, has passed two campus speech policies, the Forming Open and Robust University Minds \(FORUM\) Act and the Free Speech in Higher Education Act. The FORUM Act requires that outdoor areas of public colleges and universities be deemed public forums where members of the campus community can express themselves freely. It requires these universities to educate students on their free speech rights and responsibilities and requires that administrators, campus police, etc. understand their role regarding free expression on campus. It also requires universities to report on free speech issues and allows alleged victims to bring a cause of action for a violation of their free speech rights.

The Free Speech in Higher Education Act addresses specific concerns around student-on-student harassment that results in free speech violations (i.e. a student shouting down a classmate, thus preventing the classmate from being heard). It also bans the use of “bias response teams,” which some universities have used to intimidate students into silence under the threat of investigation.

Education on the First Amendment and what activity it protects will also be an important goal for 2026. Many illegal demonstrations have been mistakenly described as legal protest, such as the encampment protests that took place at Columbia and other universities this past year as well as blocking roads and vandalism. This year, ALEC has addressed these myths and provided the facts on the First Amendment and will continue to do so in 2026.

Protecting the privacy of donors to non-profit organizations is important in preventing the suppression of free speech. Over the past few years, states have considered legislation that requires nonprofit organizations to disclose their donors as well as their donors' donors through what is called "original source" donor disclosure.

Proponents of increased donor disclosure requirements claim this will increase transparency. In reality, it will intimidate individuals from supporting causes they believe in out of fear of harassment. Ultimately, this leads to suppression of speech. For well over a decade, state and federal lawmakers have considered various legislative proposals regarding the use of consumer data in our increasingly digital and internet connected world. ALEC maintains that a unified federal standard on consumer privacy is preferable to a 50-state patchwork.

However, absent a federal solution, many states are likely to advance their own comprehensive privacy bills. When crafting privacy legislation, lawmakers must carefully balance the issues of consumer protection and child safety without hampering innovation and unduly burdening interstate commerce pursuant to Article I of the U.S. Constitution.

As part of this effort to balance privacy and innovation, ALEC members have already approved a model resolution opposing the development of a central bank digital currency (CBDC). The subject of children's online safety remains a critical priority for parents, educators, and government officials nationwide. Although some policy solutions like strict age verification mechanisms are often crafted with noble intentions to protect children online, some stakeholders have raised concerns about the unintended consequences of excessive government intervention in social media platforms and likely First Amendment concerns.

ALEC members offer a better approach that puts parents in the driver's seat and aims to prepare teens for the digital world by incorporating digital literacy and internet safety into the school curriculum. Such instruction in grades 6-12 would not only promote healthy online behaviors and the benefits of responsible social media use, but also teach the negative effects of social media on topics like mental health, cyberbullying, and the permanency of sharing information online.

By teaching teens how to responsibly navigate online platforms, states can partner with parents to mitigate the risks and determine the appropriate level of use for each individual child. ACCE

Our Founding Fathers outlined their vision of how the government should be structured in the Federalist Papers and later enshrined it in the U.S. Constitution, hoping their design allowed each level of government to function properly and provide stability to the country. Since the Founders made no mention of local government in the Constitution, this necessarily implies that local governments are creations of state governments under their authority.

Within this context exist two types of governing authorities, Home Rule and the Dillon Rule. Home Rule gives local governments the authority to make broad legislative decisions not addressed by the state; Dillon Rule allows for local governments to only legislate what the state government has decreed. State governments created both authorities to help administer the functions of government, as it would be virtually impossible for state governments to administer public safety, infrastructure, and zoning ordinances without these political subdivisions. The Dillon Rule and Home Rule keep local governments focused on what they handle best: local matters. Whether the Dillon Rule or Home Rule governs a local government, states ultimately decide their powers.

Most Americans assume that public schools are accountable simply by virtue of being government entities. Despite that assumption, public schools often face no consequences when their students underperform. Much of this is driven by the fact that school board elections are typically held in off-cycle years when voter turnout is the lowest. Education is a critical issue, so lawmakers should ensure that as many voters as possible are able to vote in their local school board elections.

To enhance education freedom at the local level, the ACCE Model County Code Ordinance seeks to streamline the zoning ordinances as they related to educational startups such as micro or charter schools.
